The Grand Performer Award recognizes the cows that place the highest and produce the most milk. It is always a fun contest. Be sure to bring individual cow sheets for your show cows. A $25 award, donated by Fire Blight

I have answered hundreds of inquiries this summer about the dead or drooping branches on apples and pears. This past spring brought with it the perfect conditions for a disease called fire blight. Fire blight is a very common bacterial disease that affects apples, crabapples and pears. It can be very destructive, especially if we experience warm weather (70 degrees) and a rain event during full bloom, as we did 4-5 weeks ago.

Symptoms of fire blight
Fire blight can be easily identified by its unique symptoms. An infected tree’s leaves and branches will shrivel and turn brown or black, giving it a scorched appearance, hence the name. The flowers on the tree will shrivel and turn brown or black. The twigs and branches show the same symptoms as the infection spreads down the branch.

Treatment
Remove any branched infected with fire blight as soon as it is noticed to prevent it from spreading further. There are both cultural and chemical methods, with the most successful treatment being a combination of both.

To physically remove the disease, cut back any infected branches 8-12 inches below the infection to insure complete removal of the bacteria. If the infection is caught early and the infected twigs are small, it is advisable to break them by hand, as bacteria can be spread on pruners. If pruners are needed, they should be cleaned between each cut with a 10 percent solution of bleach and water, or a 70% isopropyl alcohol to prevent the spread of the disease. With correct and thorough treatment, the bacteria can be controlled before it causes great amounts of damage.

For next season: Spray the tree when the trees are in bloom in the spring if warm temperatures and moisture during bloom time are present. Most of the sprays available from local nurseries and farm stores contain streptomycin or fixed copper. If sprays are used, remember to follow the label for proper application.
