Summer Heat – Keeping the yard and garden alive.

Despite all of our early spring moisture, yards and gardens are struggling with the sudden spike in heat. Below are a few tips to help keep your plants healthy through the heat:

Watering- Water your plants longer and less often. Deep watering encourages deep roots to help your plants survive times of extreme heat. Kentucky bluegrass, which composes most of our lawns is considered to be cool-season. In 90 plus degrees, the lawns struggle to stay lush and green. They are genetically programmed to enter a summer dormancy to stay alive. Even in the heat of summer irrigation settings should never come on every day. Depending on soil texture, watering every 3-4 days should be sufficient. During June and July, lawns typically need 1.5 to 2" of irrigation per week during June/July. Keep in mind that landscape plants and vegetables may also be stressed from the sudden increase in temperature. Be sure to soak your trees this summer, even if they are irrigated by your sprinkler system.

Mowing- During the hot months of summer, mow lawns as high as possible (between 2 and 3 inches). The longer the grass blades are, the deeper the roots can grow to explore the soil profile for water.

Mulching- Covering flower beds and areas of exposed soil with 2 to 4 inches of bark or mulch not only helps reduce weeds, it also helps retain soil moisture for longer periods of time. Grass clippings can also be used as a mulch in gardens and can be tilled into the soil in the fall to add nitrogen to the soil. As a word of caution, however, Do Not use lawn clippings if they have been treated with a weed n' feed fertilizer.
