Understanding Personal Novels
Dr. Randy S. Chatelain, Ph.D.
DrChat-Marriage.com

From birth, I begin to write a “novel” in my head called “The World According to Me”

We are unique individuals. No two novels will be identical. We will differ.

I shouldn’t expect others to always agree. If we differ, you are not automatically wrong.

I have a right to my novel, you have a right to yours. I have the same confidence in my novel, as you do in yours.

Only you can read me your novel. You are the authority on your novel. I am the authority on mine. I can’t tell you what you “really think”.

Only you can edit or change your novel. There are no “White-Out Rights”. (I only white out the screen on your computer.)

I will need to edit or change many things in my novel.

Over time, we will “Co-author” many things So that we are “on the same page”.

Even though our novels differ, we can live together and love each other.